Ravenswood revitalizes chapter

It wasn't too long ago that the Ravenswood Teachers Association was embroiled in several crises at once. They were in danger of losing their CTA charter, they were battling an unsympathetic school board, and morale in the association was at an all-time low.

That isn't the picture today. "In just two years," says CTA President Ed Foglia who recently toured the district visiting all schools, "Ravenswood has become an association on the move." Under the leadership of President Martha Hanks and Vice President Diane Otterby, the association settled a three-year contract that gave them a retroactive amount for the first year; between 18 and 24 percent for the second; and a Cost of Living Allowance the third year.

"Our salary schedule just wasn't equitable," says Hanks. "We had one of the best starting salaries in the area, but experienced teachers were not being rewarded. Their salaries were just slightly above the beginning salaries. We turned that around. The 18-24 percent increase enabled us to revamp the schedule and, while it isn't all we have wanted, it is certainly better than it has ever been before."

Hanks and Otterby brought close cooperation to the executive committee of Ravenswood when they first ran for office two years ago. Hanks ran for vice president, Otterby for secretary. A biracial team themselves, once on the executive team, they began to work for unity from the inside out.

Hanks reports that she had known Rev. James Davis, the then newly elected president of the school board, from her work with the Chamber of Commerce. "At a banquet for the chamber, he asked me what I wanted. So I told him. He gave his word, in public, that the teachers contract would be settled by September. And it was."

Neither Hanks nor Otterby had previously been active in the association. "It was all new to us," Otterby emphasizes.

"I didn't know anything about grievances or negotiations," Hanks says. "But with CTA's help, we learned quickly."

Both praise CTA staff attorneys Gene Huguenin and Diane Ross for their assistance with some ticklish internal problems. "And Charley Hinton and Marilyn Aden were invaluable in helping us get through the bargaining crisis and move on," Otterby says.

Ravenswood Vice President Diane Otterby and former Secretary Missy Varganin show off their "Showcase of Excellence" with their students.

Martha Hanks, President Ravenswood Teachers Association

"This year, lots of people are involved. We sent out surveys asking what they want us to do. We get lots of input. We've been more together, more united."

To consolidate their gains, both decided to run for office again this year. "At first, we only had time to bargain and handle immediate problems and grievances," Hanks says. "This year, we want to put some new committees in place and get some additional things accomplished."

Both point out that they had a lot of assistance from Secretary Missy Varganin who has just been succeeded by Mattie McCloud. "We are expecting great things from Mattie and from newly elected Treasurer Al Julian," Hanks says. In addition, there are three new representatives on the executive board: Louis Hines, Gene Small, and Cindy Patrick.

Otterby teaches at James B. Flood Elementary School, Hanks at Willow Oaks. On the day they spoke with CTA Action, Otterby's class had just completed its science fair competition in the district's "Showcase of Excellence." "Flood is a science and technology magnet," she said, "so the bulk of our projects are in that area."

Hanks works in a Marva Collins magnet, and her class was working on reciting a poem invoking self-esteem and pride of accomplishment.

Both say they hope to begin negotiations with the district for the next contract in September and complete it by June, 1991—the first time in a long time the Ravenswood teachers would have a contract before school opens.

They also give credit to their current superintendent Charlie Knight who has, they say, given stability to the district and instituted popular programs.
